THE SPIRIT OF THE NATIONAL GUARDS.

(Times Correspondent.) The National Guards were affronted in the irst instance at not being consulted, were it only for the form of the thing, on the choice of the new General put over them. They new with displeasure that they were set aside when the question of retaking the cannon pointed at the heights of Montmartre and Bolleville was montad. A good many, from ignorance or vainglory, cannot forgive the Assembly for having voted for Peace. They do not concern themselves about the consequences which would have followed upon a contrary vote, and imagine that the revictualling of the city came from the skies. There are some even who seriously affirm that there was no lack of provislone, and that if people were enting black bread it was because the Government of the Defence kept the flour conceiled. According to them the contest was not only possible, it would have been triumphant. Nothing would have been easier than to drive out the Prussians, and if it was not done it was because. people did not choose to do it. Can you be surprised that this incornigible class of the Parisian bourgeoisis allows itself to be ruled by a sqt of scoundrels? Even the murder of officers who had been abandoned by their mon sannot excite them, they are prepared to think t a good thing that the insurrection has overturned "the Government of the Provinces." Afterall, "Paris is always France, is the light, the torab of the universe! Paris alone has shown firmness, dignity, courage. Paris has always | fung to Hongkong merchant. defended itself, has always been victorious, while the cowardly, selfish Provinces abandoued it, fung to Japan merchant. and were always beaten." Everyone tells them, and they believe it, that Paris was the admiration of the world; then, why should they bow White Sugar, 200 picu, to the will of France? Why submit to the fung to Japan merebant. laws of the "Rustics!" Is is not better to bend ! to the yoke of the "Trades Unionists" and fung to Japan morehant. obey the occult power whose first care is to burn the judicial archives, and effece the history of wo to Hongkong merchant. their past lives. P Do not suppose, however, that this is language overlieurd only in the open air clubs, at street corners, and on the Boulevards; these are the expressions of geople whom I had thought very sensible, who holds certain muk in the middle classes, and who certainly would be very little pleased to see their shope pillaged and their houses plundered. But the pride of possessing a uniform and a musket bus been their rain. Paris resembles a vast madhouse. It would be fortunate if there were only to be met in it that mild and harmless form of insanity which consists in imagining that the Prussians have been defeated, and that they ran away as goon as they perceived the irritated attitude of the Capital; but there are also raving madmen to whom these harmless lunatics will certainly have to apply strait waistcosts. PEGS. Much interest has recently been excited at home by an article which has appeared in the Saturday Review, called Drawing Room Alcoholism. In plain words the writer (who it need not be said puts his case with great ubility) avera that drinking in excess is one of the does of the female sex at the present day in England. There is possibly exaggeration in he statement, but we can well believe that the "pace" of modern fashionable life is calculated to induce a constant demand for stimulants; and that when days and nights are passed | SAIL MAKING in all its branches, at his old in a state of prolonged excitament, the spaces place in Duddell Street, and solicits the patron-of depression will in all likelihood be filled in age of the Public by attempts to keep the spirits up. to that unnatural and perilous pitch, which is in itself | ounce RAVINS DUCK, suitable for Boat Sails shanghai from excesses of this description. It 858 Ho The Drawing Rooms of the Settlement which have lady occupants are certainly not the places where alcoholism prevails to any great extent; but the article in the Saturday Review is not altogether inapplicable to the East. There is a babit both in India and China of supplementing the liquor consumed at the regular meals with numerous additions. If the orthodor port, sherry, stout, champagne, claret or ale may be regarded as the heavy infantry and artillery of inebriety, there are the flying coumns of intoxication and the skirmsbers of Bacobus that work abundant mischief at odd intervals and husciedly anatohed pauses. We saturate the fringes of time with cocktails, and sprinkle glasses of sherry and bitters over the day as freely as a bad compositor scatters comman over a page. Of course much may be said to extenuate the practice. Mr. Disraeli, in "Lothnir," has striven to invest the habit of occasionally liquoring up, even amongst ladies, with a postio grace. We are told that the heroof that remarkable novel fed Miss Arondel with cates as delicate as her lips, and manufactured for her dainty bevorages which would not outrage their purity;" and in another place we read of the "gentle drinks which the fancy of America could alone devise." This is very pretty, but one would really like to know what iquors were referred to. Did the beroine take Boker's bitters," or "brandy singab," or "thunder and lightning," or " tiger's nose?" There is really no special necessity for drinking at occentric and irregular hours in the East, which does not hold good in England, and in England the custom is discouraged by the frown of public opinion, and only indulged in sub-resu. The habit is probably the source of far more mischief than men are willing to admit. It is "the little rift within the lute" which has often in many cases marred the fortone of a promising career. As the social
